

As despicable as our enemies may be and as weak as our allies, this war of ours can't afford to give any quarter no matter the sacrifice.

They, who work day and night to devise new ways to imprison us, shall only see our resilient faces behind the bars, our firm grasp of the stained rails that will one day break those crumbling fences and lunge at them in noble retribution.

Against such immense evil one may find it futile to employ any form of resistance, but to simply exist in your own skin and be full of rage and opposition against such powers alone will show them their sheer vulnerability. Even in our homeless, forlorn, and most tragic moments, we pose a great threat against their malice.

Those who claim to dictate our lives have long forgotten that they too are just men, and soon a brief reminder from our ranks will tear their whole world apart and show them where true power lies in these lands they've confiscated. They will witness the reclamation of our home and the devastation of their heinous order as we crush it so impeccably that it won't ever dare to rise again.
